This message is on behalf of AOC MSD Director Ramsey Radwan and is the fourth notice to JIS LINK users and Public Index subscribers about upcoming changes involving King County Clerk's Office and King County District Court cases in JIS.

The King County Clerk's Office (KCCO) and the King County District Court (KCDC) have announced changes to the planned Case Management System (CMS) implementation schedules:

- KCCO has postponed its CMS implementation from January 2, 2018 to April 2, 2018; and
- KCDC has combined its planned April and August CMS implementations into a single go live scheduled for late-August 2018.

KCCO will continue to use JIS applications (including SCOMIS) to manage all of their cases until April 2018. Accordingly, KCCO data will still be available from JIS until the implementation is completed.

As previously stated in prior AOC messages, the following case types are no longer updated in JIS for KCDC: cases initiated with a civil summons and complaint, filing of a foreign judgment, filing of a money judgment from a district or municipal court, petition to challenge a drug based property forfeiture, and petition for return of animals.

All other KCDC cases, including small claims, civil protection orders, vehicle impounds, name changes, criminal cases, and infractions are still updated in JIS until KCDC final implementation in late-August.

Additional updates and instructions will be issued as information and schedules become available.

The first phase of the King County District Court (KCDC) new case management system is scheduled for this weekend. On Monday, October 30, 2017, the following case types will no longer be updated in JIS for King County District Court: cases initiated with a civil summons and complaint, filing of a foreign judgment, filing of a money judgment from a district or municipal court, petition to challenge a drug based property forfeiture, or a petition for return of animals.

The first phase will not impact any other KCDC civil cases, including small claims, civil protection orders, vehicle impounds, and name changes, and does not include criminal and infraction cases. JIS will still be updated by the KCDC for these case types.

Updates will be issued as more information and confirmed dates become available.

Upcoming Changes to Statewide Court Data Availability through JIS-Link and Data Indexes

Washington State Courts have used the Judicial Information System (JIS) case management applications for decades. A valuable feature of the JIS is the ability to give authorized users access to statewide court data through a single point. However, changes will soon temporarily interrupt this single point of access.

King County District Court (KCDC) and King County Clerk's Office (KCCO) are implementing independent local case management and docketing systems, which will not be part of JIS. Implementation is scheduled to begin in late October 2017 and will continue in phases. The first phase will move KCDC non-well identified party civil and small claims cases into King County's new local court case management system. During this transition, these King County cases will not be updated in JIS, and upon full implementation of the first phase, all KCDC non-well identified party civil cases will be removed from JIS. Short-term access to these cases will need to be made through KCDC. The KCDC contact for records requests is:
recordrequests.kcdc@kingcounty.gov.

KCDC and KCCO will manage their data in the new systems once implementation is complete. Both courts anticipate full implementation of their new case management and docketing systems to occur during the summer of 2018.

In response to these and other changes, AOC has begun the development and implementation of the Expedited Data Exchange (EDE) and the Electronic Data Repository (EDR) projects to address the impacts and ensure that person and case data are available statewide for JIS Link users and data index subscribers. AOC will be providing information about the impacts of these changes in the coming months, which will include explanations of changes, new recommended practices, and other information. AOC's goal is to have a smooth and straightforward transition for our JIS-Link users and data index subscribers.
